INTERNATIONAL CUP EUROPEAN CHAMPIONSHIP 2021

Fieracavalli, now in its 123rd edition, during the second weekend of the event hosted two very important events dedicated to Arabian horses in the ring of the Pala Volkswagen (Hall 8): the European Championship, the most important morphology competition in Europe held in Verona every two years, and the Verona International Cup - B Int. Show. During these three days more than 150 horses - including foals, broodmares and stallions - competed to win the title of the best Arabian bred in Europe.

Italy and ANICA association once again demonstrated their ability to manage and propose an event of the highest level, starting from the prestigious location that hosted the two competitions and that in the previous weekend saw the dispute of the World Cup show jumping. First-rate facilities and services, perimeter LED banners and a sound system worthy of an important event such as the European Championship - but it could also have been a World Championship.

Let's remember that with 27,000 horses and 1,000 members, Italy is one of the European countries that has the largest number of Arabian horses on its territory and their representation at Fieracavalli is intended to highlight the other qualities of this breed and attract more and more enthusiasts who could one day breed and compete internationally and win.

In this edition, the podium of the final stud championship was an all-Italian podium, demonstrating that Italy knows how to be among the first in the world and how to have its say on an international level even in a field such as thoroughbred breeding, counting not only on economic availability that supports investments but also and above all on the ability to see beyond and imagine unique scenarios and nuances that accompanied by a little luck can lead to exceptional success.

Considering all this we feel we can say that Italy needs to work together and united to keep the name of its breeders high, to maintain the reputation it enjoys thanks to the great efforts of breeders, trainers, veterinarians, technicians, and all the Italian workers who every day bring excellence in the world with their work, with sacrifices, with commitment and dedication.

Italy needs to return to be a world reference point for the proposal of international events. And it can do so if all the players involved in this moment will commit themselves and collaborate to win this challenge. We'll see in the coming months, now that the success of a great event like the European Championship has given a new push and enthusiasm to everyone. □

by Vincenzo Pellegrini, ANICA President

Anica faced the organization of the traditional European Championship of morphology, approached by the international city of Verona, in a very difficult context, both for the serious delay in the start of the organization (for facts not dependent on Anica) and because it took place within Fieracavalli struggling with the innovative two-week formula for Covid standards.

The result, however, left us particularly satisfied and I hope that this satisfaction is shared by those who participated in the event.

Anica's aim was above all to strengthen the perceived identity of this important international event for the world of the Arabian horse and it is for this reason that it has strongly wanted to renew its traditional presence at Fieracavalli.

Fieracavalli certainly imposes some compromises, but guarantees the advantage - otherwise unthinkable - of a large audience in attendance, this year constantly above a thousand units and several times at the limit of the quota, with consequent blocking of access to the pavilion; if one considers the rotation of the public in the stands, it can be safely said that a few thousand people every day attended the event.

What better promotion for the Arabian horse!

Anica has, however, concentrated mainly, from the beginning, on two main and indispensable objectives (i) to guarantee a venue of international standing, with attention to the stabling of the horses, to the technical quality of the ring, to the reception of guests, to the presence of lights, ledwalls and music in line with the expectations of an European Championship, (ii) gather around the team of Anica and involve all the specialized Italian media in the event, believing that it is essential to think of Fieracavalli and the European Championship as an event expected and shared first and foremost by the Italian professional system, one of the richest and most complex in the world.

I think that, for the first time, an attempt has been made to lay the foundations for a more complex team, in the conviction that combining Anica's traditional experience and institutional third party status with the promotional and communicative power of the Italian media, we could aim at further raising the level of the European Championship and perceived identity in the world. Scores of 150,000 contextual visualizations of the live streaming constitute a base that makes the goal anything but unrealistic.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank Tutto Arabi - which is hosting this speech of mine - for the professionalism and the dedication that it has shown to Anica as a partner in the promotion and communication and for the contribution in the success of the event. □
